The builders of Moscow reported in their letter, dated 16 February 1951, addressed to Stalin that by 20 December 1950, construction workers of Moscow completed 510 000 square meters of living space, thus fulfilling the plan for 1950 100 percent.

Despite this achievement there is still much room for improvement as the cost of construction is still high, primitive construction methods have not yet been entirely discarded, and efficiency of workmen is still low. Furthermore, available construction machinery and devices are not being fully exploited, and modern methods of construction have not been properly introduced.

The construction organizations discussed the plan for 1951 which provide for construction of 710,000 square meters of living space, or about 40 percent over the figure for 1950. The builders pledged to fulfill the plan for 1951 as follows:
